Making Buildings Work

The Crystal, London | 31st March 2020

Commissioning Specialists Association

PRESS RELEASE -October 2019

Commissioning – the progressing of a completed installation to full working order.

But when does the process begin?

People too often think of commissioning as the final exercise in bringing a building into use. That is not correct. To ensure that its occupants can properly use any building, commissioning needs to be considered at the very outset of the project. That consideration also needs to continue throughout each stage of the project from concept through design, planning and installation.

The Commissioning Specialists' Association is the UK's foremost authority on all matters 'commissioning' and has, as one of its key aims, the transfer of information and knowledge to the wider construction industry about the correct way to treat commissioning activities.

To that end, the CSA is running the first in a planned series of seminars entitled 'Making Buildings Work'. Are you a property developer, an architect, a services consultant, a main contractor or MEP services company, or, indeed, involved in commissioning? You might even be an end user who wonders why their current building doesn't seem to work as well as it should.

If so, you need to be at the Crystal Building in London on the 31st March 2020.

Well known speakers from the commissioning and construction industry will be providing an insight into the correct way to design, plan and install building services to ensure optimum best practice and in turn a successful commissioning phase, leading to an effective and efficient building.

More details will be issued shortly, and a dedicated website will soon be going live, but in the meantime, to learn more or register your interest, please call the CSA on be coming online +44 (0)1403 754133 or email office@csa.org.uk.
